

EVEN SAINTS LOSS PROVES MIRACLES ARE POSSIBLE

I did not intend to write anything when I sent this Christmas email, but I didn't want anyone to think I only speak of the Saints when they win. I see a victory even in this loss. Our team played until the very last click of the time on the clock, or more appropriately, until the fumble that took the ball away until the very last click of the clock. But we had a chance to tie the score and go into overtime until the very last. I was sitting home alone on the edge of the sofa with my Geaux Saints Geaux stitching in hand (Fred was at the game) cheering the team on, telling them that they could pull it off. I wonder if my voice was drowned out others being not so certain?! No matter. The miracle I see this week is that New Orleans still loves our team. We haven't given up on them. And that's a miracle. And isn't that how it should be. Love is something that keeps on being love, no matter the actions of those we give it to. Let this be a lesson to you, especially as we close 2009 and begin the New Year—a symbol of new beginnings. If you have given up on someone you love, think again about that action. You can change your mind and decide to act in a miraculous manner. Your action could just bring you a miracle of your very own. May you experience the peace and joy that comes from realizing that you have seen a miracle in your life.

... gayle

CHRISTMAS BLESSINGS

May the desires of your soul be yours not only during this Holiday Season but throughout all the seconds, minutes, hours, days, weeks, months and years of your life. ... gayle

Christmas Holiday Hours

In order to spend time visiting with family this Christmas, we will be closing Wednesday, December 23rd thru Monday, December 28th.

New Years Hours

Tues. & Wed. - December 29th & 30th - 10 am-5 pm

Sit N Stitch, Wed. Dec. 29th - 5 pm-9 pm

closed Thursday, Dec. 31st & Friday, Jan. 1st

Open Saturday, January 2nd 10:00-5:00

